Nights aren't fun anymore

THE cyber revolution has ruined nightlife, according to champion partygoer Anthony Haden-Guest. He's rewritten an introduction for his 1997 book, "The Last Party: Studio 54, Disco, and the Culture of the Night," to reflect how technology has put a damper on debauchery. "I rewrote it to show that what happened at Studio 54 could never happen now," he tells Page Six. "In the day of mobile cameras and iPhones and Twitter, no one can have a VIP room. The whole celeb culture has evolved." Adds Haden-Guest: "Back in the heyday, you'd see Elizabeth Taylor or Mick Jagger wandering around. Now they've got minders and publicists." Antics in the VIP room "would be on Gawker in 11 seconds," he said. Steven Greenberg and power publicist Kelly Cutrone will host a book party for Haden-Guest at Greenberg's 230 Fifth rooftop club on Thursday.

He'll make it in due time

FLOYD Mayweather Jr. isn't the most time-conscious guy around. After arriving late to a recent photo shoot for Interview magazine, the boxing great told everyone on the set that he had to run to the bank. He returned — but not until 2½ hours later. "I guess that's why his nickname is 'Money,'" our source laughed, adding that once Mayweather returned, the Interview crew ended up getting all the shots it needed in less than 45 minutes.

In her usual unusual garb, Lady Gaga sings to a sold-out crowd in Vancouver, where she could still be in trouble for smoking a cigarette onstage. Yesterday, her song "Bad Romance" climbed to the top of the British singles charts.

Lighting up

ROBERT De Niro and Grace Hightower, Catherine Zeta-Jones and Michael Douglas, and Katie Lee and Billy Joel all turned to lighting guru Bentley Meeker to put a glow on their weddings. Now the BBC will shoot a show in New York that will follow Bentley as he lights the rich and famous. Meeker just did the opening of Tim Burton's exhibition at MoMA and the Whitney Museum Gala, attended by the likes of Johnny Depp, Helena Bonham Carter, Lindsay Lohan, Donatella Versace and Christina Ricci.
